Nonparametric Estimation and Inference in Affine Conditional Moment Restriction Models

Conditional moment restriction (CMR) models provide a flexible framework for structural and reduced-form analysis. This paper develops a general framework for nonparametric estimation and inference in affine CMR models. We build on the sieve minimum distance framework, while allowing for modern machine learning methods in the first stage to accomodate flexible estimation of the conditional moment with many instrumental variables. We provide Wald statistic for testing smooth functionals, and provide Gaussian coupling of our sieve coefficients, which can be used for various inference problems.

Working In Progress

A Nonparametric Test of Supermodularity and Complementarity with Zhenting Sun and Zheng Fang

This paper develops a nonparametric test of supermodularity and complementarity.

Partially Constrained Deep Learning with Qihui Chen and Zheng Fang

This paper develops neural networks that enforce shape constraints by construction.

(Tentative) Distributional Difference in Differences with Ka Yan Cheng, Florian Gunsilius

We propose a novel distributional difference in differences estimator that includes quantile difference in differences as a special case.
